SURREPLY

For the first time in this appeal, Defendants asserted in their reply brief that, under Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 474 (1994), Plaintiffs in these consolidated cases may not assert separation-of-powers claims. Plaintiffs submit this surreply to explain why that assertion is both forfeited and meritless.

ARGUMENT

I. Defendants Have Forfeited Their Argument.

The lead argument in Defendants' reply is that, under Dalton, Plaintiffs' constitutional separation-of-powers claims fail because they are predicated on statutory violations. See Defs. Reply 2–8. That argument is forfeited. Defendants' opening brief did not make any argument about the unavailability of separation-of-powers claims and did not so much as cite Dalton.

“It is well established that issues not raised until the reply brief are forfeited.” Jones Lang LaSalle Americas, Inc. v. NLRB, 128 F.4th 1288, 1296 (D.C. Cir. 2025). This Court enforces this rule strictly, recognizing that “[c]onsidering an argument advanced for the first time in a reply brief ... is not only unfair to an appellee, but also entails the risk of an improvident or ill-advised opinion on the legal issues tendered.” McBride v. Merrell Dow &

Pharms., Inc., 800 F.2d 1208, 1211 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (citations omitted). In the last two years alone, this Court has invoked this rule in six different published opinions to refuse to address arguments not raised in an opening brief. See Jones Lang LaSalle, 128 F.4th at 1296–97; VTCU Corp. v. NLRB, 123 F.4th 501, 509 (D.C. Cir. 2024); Shands v. Comm’r of Internal Revenue, 111 F.4th 1, 9 (D.C. Cir. 2024); TIG Ins. Co. v. Republic of Argentina, 110 F.4th 221, 239 (D.C. Cir. 2024); Fore River Residents Against the Compressor Station v. FERC, 77 F.4th 882, 889 (D.C. Cir. 2023); Maine Lobstermen’s Ass’n v. Nat’l Marine Fisheries Serv., 70 F.4th 582, 594 (D.C. Cir. 2023). And the Court applies the rule to federal agencies, see, e.g., Nat’l Marine Fisheries Serv., 70 F.4th at 594, and to arguments implicating questions about presidential authority and the separation of powers, see Trump v. Thompson, 20 F.4th 10, 45 (D.C. Cir. 2021).

Defendants have no justification for waiting until their reply brief to raise this argument, which they raised below but chose not to present in their opening brief. In the district court, Defendants made the same argument that they make in their reply brief, and the district court addressed and rejected it. JA71 n.17. The district court’s injunction also unambiguously rested on the conclusion that Defendants’ actions likely violated the separation of powers.

The relevant section of the district court’s memorandum opinion was titled “Plaintiffs Will Likely Prevail On Their Constitutional Claims.” JA63; see also id. (“Plaintiffs also assert that Defendants are acting in violation of the separation of powers.”); see also id. JA80 (addressing the “separation of powers claims” under “Scope Of Relief”).

Had Defendants wished to argue that the district court erred in rejecting their argument about the viability of Plaintiffs’ separation-of-powers claim, they should have made that argument in their opening brief on appeal. Whatever the reason for Defendants’ choice not to do so, they have forfeited it for purposes of this appeal.

II. Defendants’ Argument Lacks Merit.

The incomplete picture of Dalton that Defendants present at this late stage underscores the risks of an “improvident or ill-advised opinion” resolving Defendants’ forfeited argument. McBride, 800 F.2d at 1211. If the Court considers the argument, however, it should reject it.

A. Plaintiffs’ separation-of-powers claim rests on Congress’s power of the purse under the Constitution, as exercised through appropriations laws that command the Executive Branch to spend money for specified purposes. Plaintiffs allege—and the district court found—that “the Executive has attempted to usurp Congress's power over the purse in violation of the separation of powers," by ignoring Congress's mandates to spend specific sums of money for specific purposes. JA71 n.17. Defendants, in other words, are violating a nondiscretionary duty to carry out Congress's spending mandates as expressed through appropriations statutes.

Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs cannot assert their separation-of-powers claims rests on a misunderstanding of Dalton. In Dalton, "[t]he President [was] said to have violated the terms" of a statute governing closure of military bases by "accepting procedurally flawed" recommendations issued by a federal commission for the closure of the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard. 511 U.S. at 474, 476. While the Court assumed "that some claims that the President has violated a statutory mandate are judicially reviewable outside the framework of the APA," it stated that "such review is not available when the statute in question commits the decision to the discretion of the President." Id. at 474. And there, the governing statute did "not at all limit the President's discretion in approving or disapproving the Commission's recommendations." Id. at 476.

In so holding, the Court contrasted the plaintiffs' constitutional claim with the one properly raised by the plaintiff in Youngstown, where the President had asserted an “inherent constitutional power” to take the challenged action. Id. at 473 (citing Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585, 587 (1952)).

B. This Court’s precedent confirms that Dalton does not foreclose all constitutional claims that relate to statutory violations.

In In re Aiken County, this Court issued mandamus based on an agency’s constitutional violation in refusing to “comply with the law as it has been set by Congress.” 725 F.3d 255, 257 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (Kavanaugh, J.). There, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission had “declined to continue the statutorily mandated Yucca Mountain licensing process.” Id. at 259. The Court held that, “[u]nder Article II of the Constitution and relevant Supreme Court precedents, the President must follow statutory mandates.” Id. The Court further held that “our constitutional system of separation of powers would be significantly altered if [the Court] were to allow executive ... agencies to disregard federal law.” Id. at 267. Thus, the Court’s “decision ... rest[ed] on the constitutional authority of Congress, and the respect that the Executive and the Judiciary properly owe to Congress.” Id. at 267. There is no way to reconcile Aiken’s constitutional holding with Defendants’ contention that statutory violations cannot establish independently actionable separation-of-powers claims.

Consistent with Aiken County, in Chamber of Commerce of United States v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322 (D.C. Cir. 1996), this Court held that Dalton’s reach is limited to claims predicated on statutes giving the President wide discretionary in taking action. The Court held that “Dalton’s holding merely stands for the proposition that when a statute entrusts a discrete specific decision to the President and contains no limitations on the President’s exercise of that authority, judicial review of an abuse of discretion claim is not available.” Id. at 1331. In Reich, the government argued, using language markedly similar to Defendants’ here, that Dalton foreclosed the plaintiff’s constitutional claims because they were “statutory claims in constitutional dress.” Br. for Appellee at 23, Reich, 1995 WL 17204619 (Oct. 26, 1995). Rejecting the government’s argument, this Court explained that “Dalton is inapposite where the claim instead is that the presidential action—not one, it should be added, even contemplated by Congress—independently violates” the statute at issue. Reich, 74 F.3d at 1332.

C. Dalton accordingly does not aid defendants here, for two independent reasons.

First, as in Aiken and in sharp contrast to Dalton, Plaintiffs here have alleged violations of non-discretionary statutory mandates. As the district court explained, “Plaintiffs assert that the Executive has attempted to usurp Congress’s power over the purse in violation of the separation of powers, and there is no asserted or plausible argument that the President is simply exercising discretionary authority conferred by statute.” JA71 n.17. See Pls. Br. 32–44; Pls. Ltr. Supp. Auth. (June 16, 2025).

Second, as Defendants acknowledge, Dalton does not foreclose separation-of-powers claims where “executive officers rely on” the Constitution “as an independent source of authority to act.” Reply Br. 5. Although they claim that such facts are not presented here, id., they spend many pages defending their actions based on the “constitutional” “Executive Branch discretion in the sphere of foreign affairs.” Defs. Br. 47; see id. at 47–57; Reply Br. 15–16. Moreover, in the district court, Defendants relied solely on constitutional, not statutory, authority in responding to the separation-of-powers claims: They asserted the President’s purported “vast and generally unreviewable” constitutional powers over foreign affairs. JA36. They did not argue that the appropriations statutes did not require them to spend the sums appropriated. And the challenged executive actions did not invoke statutory authority. See, e.g., Exec. Order No. 14,169, 90 Fed. Reg. 8619 (Jan. 20, 2025). Thus, like in Youngstown, “[t]he only basis of authority asserted”—until this appeal—“was the President’s inherent constitutional power.” Dalton, 511 U.S. at 473 (distinguishing Youngstown).

D. Finally, in arguing that Dalton forecloses Plaintiffs from obtaining relief, Defendants omit that the district court independently held that “Plaintiffs would be likely to succeed on their claims that Defendants acted ultra vires” in impounding funds “beyond the scope” of their statutory authority. JA72 n.18. Plaintiffs have not “disclaimed” this alternative ground for affirmance as Defendants seem to suggest. Reply Br. 3. The Court may affirm on this alternative, non-constitutional ground.

CONCLUSION

The Court should affirm the decision below.
